A Torch Against the Night is simply the superior YA Fantasy of the year. Hands down, there's no competition. An Ember in the Ashes was merely a prelude to the sinister follow up. The story remains about oppression, but unlike the first book this is where readers could vividly see the resistance at first hand. The stakes are higher. There is more gore, and violence.

A Torch Against the Night, the follow up to Sabaa Tahir's YA epic fantasy An Ember in the Ashes, certainly puts its readers through the emotional wringer. Tahir's world is one whose ordinary inhabitants suffer under the constant oppression of an occupying force: the military and rulers (the two are in many ways one and the same) of the Martial Empire. In creating her Martial oppressors ...

The Nightbringer is the king of the jinn. He is an antagonist or a grey character in the story (depends on how you see him). His mission has always been retrieving the broken pieces of the Star but it is bounded by magic, therefore each time he finds one, he must ensure that it is offered to him in love and trust. The magic, however, is not one-sided, as the Nightbringer has to render love and ...

An Ember in the Ashes is one of my favorite YA fantasy debuts; Sabaa Tahir's world was mesmerizing yet brutal, and it was so easy to lose myself in the bloody story of an Empire inspired by Greek and Roman culture. Sadly, in A Torch Against the Night I didn't manage to fully grasp that flare of magic I was confident I'd find.

Like the first book, TORCH AGAINST THE NIGHT is a fast paced, bloody, and political tale. However, there's far more magic and mysticism in this one, which is an aspect I particularly enjoyed as our three favorite characters discover and learn to hone their magical skills. Magic is secondary to the emotion and self-discovery enveloping Elias, Laia, and Helene as they're forced to make decisions ...
